Absent-minded Prof
parks wife, kisses Rambler

by Hoff

There were some professors who got called into the college president's office. "Is this?" said the prince. "Yes, but you've parked your wife and kissed your new 1959 Rambler!" "Yes, sir," said the prof. "Not . . ."

"Look closer, mister! This is a Rambler!" said the prince. "But sir," said the prof. "There aren't school-rooms named Rambler! That big, gaudy little I used to drive that didn't fit my garage and my wife didn't want it!"

"What? I decided to make it for a little longer yet, but my wife said, 'We have two children, now, Reverend!' 'Bless me and spare me, sir, do do.' Then my youngest student told me about Rambler—big car room, small car economy."

"Sir, I got a Rambler and not even when I had to go to that conference at State U. I parked my wife at my mother's and kissed my Rambler. Because it's a combination of a car and gets better the mileage of my former big car," said the prof.

"That's what this thing is, no longer a car!" said the prince. "My wife said we're only getting five or six miles per gallon—sir, it's five or six gallons per mile—sir, get it?" "So where is that Rambler dealer?"
